The fact that Dr. Joseph J. Kinyoun, of the District health department, is giving daily illustrations how an official can draw two salaries from the District government, has been made the subject of a letter to The Washington Herald. Dr. Woodward, the health officer, yesterday admitted the truth of the ass tion, but said that Dr Kinyoun was keeping within the letter of the law. According to the statute, two salaries

According to the statute, two salaries may be paid to one official, provided the aggrapate does not exceed $2,500 a year. Dr. Kinyoun is on the pay roll of the contagious disease fund as a bacteriologist, and gets $6 a day, or $2,200 a year. This is not a position specifically appropriate for, but the compensation is paid out of a lump sum appropriation. In addition to this position, he is pathologist at the Tuberculosis Hoesital, at a salary of $300 a year. These two salaries are exactly equal to the legal limit.

In addition to these two official positions, Dr. Kinyoun is connected with the George Washington University.
